About the Church

The Church is open daily for visitors and for quiet reflective prayer.

Holy Trinity is the Anglican Parish Church serving Rathmell with Wigglesworth. It is in the heart of this rural community. It was built in approximately 1935 and consecrated in 1842.

Built to accommodate Anglican worship in Victorian times as one of a number of daughter churches around that time of the ancient parish of St Alkelda in Giggleswick, this is a place of present day worship which holds its rural community history with pride.

The repairs in 2016/17 which were carried out with HLF funding are a testimony to the faith of the present day custodians of this place as well as a symbol of the affection and generosity of the wider community the church serves.

A comprehensive Church booklet, can be found in Church, gives details of the history and the contents of the Church to bring your visit alive.

Windows

The very fine stained glass windows are the jewels in the crown of this little Church. They show it as both an historic place of worship and a valued centre for worship today.

There are two windows by the internationally renowned Belgian glass maker Jean-Baptiste Capronnier (1814-1891).

A further stained glass window was added in 1992. Designed by Roy Coomber, an important national stained glass artist with studios in Bristol, and manufactured by Pendle Glass, the window was commissioned to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the consecration.
